The Goods on: Captain Peterson

Captain Peterson is a hard working cop who loves to impress lovely women with his gambling acuity. The problem is he isn't very good at it. Still he has a large line of credit at establishments connected with the Clambino family. We provide him the cash, we provide him the women, and he occasionally helps us out when law enforcement starts getting their nose into something important.

Included in this dossier are photos of Peterson accepting cash bribes, Photos of Peterson in the executive suite with his many girlfriends (photos his wife might be interested in seeing one day)

One of Peterson's men has infiltrated the family, but he's of no consequence. We keep him mostly in the dark or sniffing up the wrong trees. When he gets wind of something real, Peterson puts a stop to it.

The Goods on: Donny Macdonald

MacDonald is involved with Latin American drug cartels. In this dossier are photos of MacDonald meeting with high-level lieutenants in Columbia and Peru. Money is changing hands as are various powdered substances. There is also evidence here that he has been moving weapons to small dictators and rebels throughout South America.

The Goods on: Nigel Winchester

Winchester is a European cat burglar of some renown. Scotland yard has been trying to get a photo of this guy for years. He's done a couple of jobs for us now and we arranged to get his photo in the act. He's a slippery fellow and even having the photos would not guarantee Scotland yard would catch up with him, but it would make his life more difficult. Winchester is also heavily into the pornography business. Some of his products are particularly vile.

The Goods on: Cricket Fiengold

Cricket is a techno-geek with few redeeming qualities. One is his ability to crank out electronic devices like magic. His tools have made it easier than ever to snap open a vault or crack an encrypted access code. He signs all his work. Several small devices in this dossier have the Fiengold stamp of approval.
